The Last Fortress: How the NNP Held St. George North West

The NNP's only surviving seat held because the party planned a succession, chose early and stayed united. Yet the fortress is shrinking: fewer voters, a lost village, and a vote that has declined at every election since 2018.

BY GREG HOSTEN ST. GEORGE NORTH WEST, GRENADA

ST. GEORGE NORTH WEST, GRENADA—In an election that swept away 14 of its 15 seats, the New National Party kept exactly one: St. George North West, the constituency Dr. Keith Mitchell represented from December 1984 until Parliament was dissolved this year. His successor, Dr. Adrian Joseph, took 2,052 votes on 5th November, against 810 for the NDC's Nigel DeGale and 69 for Jonathan La Crette of the People's National Party. In the midst of a national rout, a majority of 1,242 is no small achievement.

"Here the party chose early, the branch stayed united, and the split hurt the other side. In the Town, every one of those went the wrong way."
GREG HOSTEN

The lesson of St. George North West, however, is not that the seat is safe. It is that the NNP did here, almost step for step, what it failed to do everywhere else, and that even here the ground is shifting beneath it. The party held the fortress; it did not enlarge it.

FORTY-TWO YEARS OF ONE MAN

Dr. Mitchell was first elected for St. George North West in December 1984 and held the seat at every subsequent election. He led the NNP from 1989, served as prime minister for nearly 23 years across two spells, and remained the seat's member after the party lost government in 2022. He was born in Brizan, one of the villages he represented.

His margins describe a personal fortress. In 2018 he defeated the NDC's Ali Dowden by 2,546 votes to 406, more than 86 per cent of the two-party vote. Even in 2022, the year his party lost power, he took 2,211 votes against 773 for the NDC's Jonathan La Crette, about 74 per cent, on a turnout of 66 per cent of an electorate of 4,534.

A SUCCESSION PLANNED IN JANUARY

Dr. Mitchell, then 79, announced his retirement at a party forum on 22nd January 2026 and named his successor the same night: Dr. Adrian Joseph, the acting Clerk of Parliament, a diplomat and a former Chief of Protocol. Within days the branch formally endorsed Dr. Joseph as caretaker.

That gave the newcomer roughly ten months before polling day, with the outgoing member's public endorsement and a united branch behind him. No one in the seat had to wonder who the party's candidate was. The contrast with the Town of St. George, where the NNP's branch executive resigned and a former minister took his base to a new party, or with St. George South, where the NNP has fielded four different candidates in four elections, could hardly be sharper.

THE NDC CHOSE LATE, AND DIVIDED

The NDC's path ran in the opposite direction. Prime Minister Dickon Mitchell dismissed Mr. La Crette from Cabinet at the end of July 2024 and had his Senate appointment revoked. By October 2024 Mr. La Crette had resigned from the NDC, and on 1st June 2025 he launched the People's National Party, announcing that he would contest St. George North West under its banner.

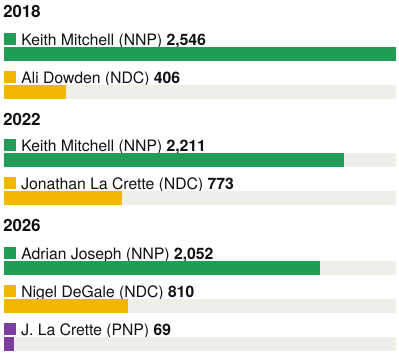

Congress was consequently without a candidate for most of the term. As late as September 2026 the seat was one of three for which it still had no standard-bearer. That month the retired school principal Nigel DeGale won the nomination, declaring that he could deliver the seat for the first time since 1984. He had roughly eight weeks in which to do so.

LOYALTY, NOT MOMENTUM

Dr. Joseph's 2,052 votes amounted to 71.7 per cent of the vote for the two main parties, in an election in which the NNP drew 37.7

per cent nationally. The seat ran 34 points ahead of the party, up from 26 points in 2022, precisely because the party has fallen much faster than its fortress.

The handover itself succeeded. Between 2022 and 2026 the NNP's two-party share here fell by only 2.4 points, against 10.3 points nationally; the voters who had supported Dr. Mitchell for four decades largely transferred their loyalty to the man he chose. That is the strongest evidence anywhere in this series that early, public succession planning protects a seat.

Yet the fortress is shrinking. The NNP's vote here has declined at every election, from 2,546 in 2018 to 2,211 in 2022 and 2,052 in 2026, a loss of 494 votes in eight years, while the NDC's vote has doubled over the same period, from 406 to 810. The seat remains safe, but it is less safe than it was.

THE VILLAGE THE NNP LOST

The polling-division returns reveal where the walls are thinnest. The NNP carried 14 of the 15 divisions. Its strongholds are Brizan, where it took 77.9 per cent of the two-party vote across two divisions; Happy Hill, with 78.8 per cent across three; and Grand Mal, with 76.2 per cent. In one Grand Mal division the NNP took 174 votes to the NDC's 34.

The exception is Willis. At the Willis Community Centre the NDC won by 142 votes to 125, the only division in the constituency the NNP failed to carry. Nearby Grenville Vale, the smallest division with 103 voters, gave the NNP just 55 per cent. These are the cracks an opponent will seek to widen over the next four years, and they are where a sitting member must be seen first.

THE 2,027 WHO STAYED HOME

The quietest number in St. George North West is also the most troubling. Turnout fell from 66.1 per cent in 2022 to 59.2 per cent this year, the second-lowest of all 15 constituencies after St. George South. The register grew by 432 names, yet 56 fewer ballots were cast; in all, 2,027 registered voters did not vote.

Measured against the whole electorate, the NNP's position has slipped sharply. In 2022 Dr. Mitchell won the votes of 48.8 per cent of all registered voters in the seat; in 2026 Dr. Joseph won 41.3 per cent. A fortress defended by ever fewer people does not remain a fortress for long.

THE BREAKAWAY THAT BARELY REGISTERED

Mr. La Crette's candidacy offers a useful test of personal votes. In 2022, as the NDC candidate, he won 773 votes; standing for his own party in 2026, he won 69, while the NDC's vote barely moved. Nearly all of his 2022 support, in other words, belonged to the party rather than to him.

Contrast that with the Town of St. George, where Peter David took 730 votes for his Democratic People's Movement after leaving the NNP, and handed the seat to the NDC by three votes. The difference is that Mr. David had spent years building a personal base in the Town, including a term as its MP. A breakaway candidate is dangerous only when the base walks out with him, and here it did not.

ONE SEAT IS NOT A PARTY

The NNP now holds one seat in fifteen, and that seat is held by a man who had never before faced the voters. Its parliamentary presence rests on a constituency whose loyalty was built by someone who has left the ballot. Whether that loyalty becomes Dr. Joseph's own will depend on what he does between now and the next election.

There is a deeper risk for the party. A seat won this comfortably can become an excuse not to change. The NNP's national share of the two-party vote has fallen from 48.0 per cent in 2022 to 37.7 per cent in 2026; one safe seat cannot conceal that, and should not be permitted to.

WHAT CAN BE DONE: A FOUR-YEAR PLAN TO HOLD AND GROW

St. George North West does not need rescuing. It needs a sitting member who converts an inherited majority into a personal one, and a party that uses its only seat as a base from which to rebuild the rest of St. George.

Year one, 2027: open a permanent constituency office and publish regular surgery hours, so that Dr. Joseph becomes known for his own service and not only for Dr. Mitchell's endorsement. Begin in Willis and Grenville Vale, where the NNP is weakest, before turning to Brizan and Happy Hill, where it is strongest. Build a household list of the 2,027 who stayed home.

Year two, 2028: run a turnout programme aimed at young and first-time voters, whose names are swelling the register even as the number of ballots falls. Register new voters every month rather than every election, and give each of the 15 polling divisions its own captain, with a quarterly target for contacts.

Year three, 2029: make the seat the NNP's training ground for St. George. Send volunteers from Brizan, Happy Hill and Grand Mal to help rebuild the branches in the Town of St. George and St. George North East, where the party's vote collapsed. A fortress that does not supply the rest of the army is merely a refuge.

Year four, 2030: set targets that measure growth rather than survival. Win back Willis, lift turnout above 66 per cent again, and push the NNP vote back above the 2,211 Dr. Mitchell won in 2022. If all three are achieved, the seat will be safer at the next election than it was at this one, which has not been true since 2018.

THE LESSON FOR EVERY NNP SEAT

Here the party chose early, the outgoing member handed over in public, the branch stayed united, and the split hurt the other side. In the Town of St. George every one of those went the wrong way, and the NNP lost the capital by three votes.

The method is no secret. It was tried in one constituency in 2026, and it worked amid the worst national result in the party's history. The question for 2030/31 is whether the NNP will apply it in the other fourteen, beginning now.

WHAT IT MEANS FOR 2030/31

1. Choose early: ten months of caretaking beat eight weeks of campaigning.
2. Hand over in public: a trusted incumbent's endorsement transfers loyalty.
3. Holding is not growing: the NNP vote here has fallen at every election since 2018.
4. Fix the weak spots first: Willis and Grenville Vale before the strongholds.
5. Chase the 2,027 non-voters: turnout fell seven points in four years.
6. Turn an inherited majority into a personal one through visible service.
7. Use safe seats to train volunteers for the seats that were lost.
8. A breakaway hurts only when the base walks out with the candidate.
