THE WAR ROOM JOURNAL

7TH JANUARY 2027 THE CONSTITUENCY SERIES · GRENADA ELECTION 2026 VOL. 10 OF 15

VOL. 10 · ST. GEORGE SOUTH

The Revolving Door: How the NNP Gave Away Grenada's Biggest Seat

St. George South holds the airport, Grand Anse, the university and most of the hotels. The NNP has sent it four candidates in four elections, lost it by 2,792 votes, and failed to win a single polling division. This volume sets out how it might begin again.

BY GREG HOSTEN ST. GEORGE SOUTH, GRENADA

ST. GEORGE SOUTH, GRENADA—No constituency in Grenada matters more to the economy than St. George South, and none has been handled more carelessly by the New National Party. It is the country's largest seat, with 12,103 registered voters this year, nearly three times the Town of St. George, and it takes in Grand Anse, True Blue, L'Anse aux Épines, Calliste, Woburn and Springs, together with the international airport at Point Salines, St. George's University and most of the island's major hotels. On 5th November the NDC's Andy Williams took 4,637 votes to 1,845 for the NNP's Christopher DeAllie Jr. The NNP has treated this seat as a posting; Mr. Williams has treated it as home.

> "A full slate is a press release. An office, a staff, a canvass list and a budget are a campaign."
> GREG HOSTEN

FOUR ELECTIONS, FOUR CANDIDATES

Consider whom the NNP has placed on the ballot here: Alexandra Otway-Noel in 2013, Nickolas Steele in 2018, Norland Cox in 2022 and Christopher DeAllie Jr. in 2026. That is four different candidates in four consecutive elections, in the one seat where name recognition is hardest to build because the electorate is so large.

Each change reset the clock. Voters in Grand Anse and Calliste never came to know a single NNP representative over several terms, and the party never gave any candidate the time to become part of the furniture. In politics the absence of a familiar face is itself a message, and the message here was that the seat could be filled from anywhere.

NINE YEARS IN POWER BOUGHT NO LOYALTY

The NNP held St. George South throughout its nine years in government, from 2013 to 2022, with ministers, budgets and the airport, the beach and the hotel belt under its administration. It nonetheless lost the seat at the first election after it lost power, and in 2026 it lost it by more than two and a half times the 2022 margin.

That is the sharpest indictment in this volume. The NNP's hold on the south was a hold of incumbency, not of organisation. Mr. Steele's 3,536 votes in 2018 were the party's high point, and the party appears to have mistaken a sitting minister's personal vote for a party base; when the minister retired and the government changed, nothing lay beneath. Since 2018 the NNP's vote here has fallen from 3,536 to 1,845, a loss of almost half its voters in eight years.

2022: THE MINISTER FROM CARRIACOU

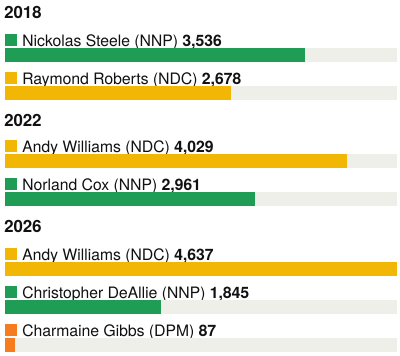

The clearest example came in 2022. With Mr. Steele retiring, the NNP branch endorsed Norland Cox as its candidate at the end of January. Mr. Cox was the Infrastructure Development Minister and a senator, and he came from Carriacou. The party was, in effect, running a sister-isle minister against a Grand Anse businessman in Grand Anse.

The NDC's choice was Andy Williams, founder of the Hot Spot supermarket chain and a former financial comptroller at the Rex Grenadian hotel: local, known and visible. On polling day he took 4,029 votes to Mr. Cox's 2,961, a margin of 1,068.

Mr. Cox did not stay to fight again. In September 2025 the NNP named him caretaker for Carriacou and Petite Martinique, where he lost again this year, by 2,392 votes to 1,416. The party moved its 2022 candidate to a different seat and lost both.

2018 VS 2022 VS 2026

Votes by candidate, in party colours

2,792 votes
NDC winning margin in 2026

BY THE NUMBERS

12,103
Registered voters, the most of any seat

0 of 33
Polling divisions won by the NNP

54.5%
Turnout, the lowest of all 15 seats

–1,691
Fall in the NNP vote since 2018

THE NUMBERS BEHIND THE COLLAPSE

This was not one bad night but two in succession. Between 2018 and 2022 the NNP's share of the two-party vote here fell from 56.9 per cent to 42.4 per cent, a drop of 14.5 points. Between 2022 and 2026 it fell again, to 28.5 per cent, a further 13.9 points against a national fall of 10.3. The south turned on the NNP more sharply than the country did.

The composition of the change matters. In 2022 the NDC gained 1,351 votes while the NNP lost only 575, so that more than half of Mr. Williams's new votes came from people who had backed neither party in 2018. In 2026 the pattern reversed: the NNP lost 1,116 votes and the NDC gained only 608. Even if every one of the NDC's new votes came from NNP switchers, at least 508 of the NNP's 2022 voters simply did not vote for anyone. The NNP is no longer merely losing the argument here; it is losing its own people to the sofa.

Measured against the whole electorate, the picture is starker still. Mr. Williams won the votes of 38 per cent of all registered voters in the constituency, and Mr. DeAllie 15 per cent. There was no split to blame: the DPM and the Grenada Social Democratic Party took 95 votes between them.

The seat also carries outsized national weight. This year St. George South alone supplied 12.4 per cent of every vote the NDC won nationally; a party that writes it off is ignoring one in every eight votes its opponent won.

NOT ONE POLLING DIVISION

The polling-division returns are the most unforgiving evidence of all. The NNP did not carry a single one of the seat's 33 divisions. Its best result anywhere was 37.8 per cent of the two-party vote, at Blessed Sacrament R.C. School; its worst was 20.6 per cent, at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints polling station; and in the two Woburn Community Centre divisions it took barely one vote in four.

There is no NNP stronghold in the south from which to build, and no village where the party can claim its message is working. Every rebuilding plan must start from the same place: a constituency where, at best, three voters in eight chose the NNP.

A CARETAKER WITHOUT A BASE

The NNP named Christopher DeAllie Jr. caretaker on 23rd April 2025, about 19 months before the vote. He is a business and finance professional with a degree in business management and a postgraduate diploma in financial planning, and he founded what the party described as the island's first indoor mushroom farm. On paper, that is a credible profile for a seat full of entrepreneurs and professionals.

Nineteen months, however, is not long in a constituency of 12,000 voters, and the support around him was thin. In 2025 The New Today reported speculation that several new NNP caretakers, Mr. DeAllie among them, were working without party offices. In the same report a former NNP minister accused Dr. Keith Mitchell of not doing enough to help the new caretakers financially, adding that only the sitting NNP MPs had constituency offices, funded by the state. Against a sitting minister with a permanent office in Grand Anse, the NNP sent a newcomer without one.

In February 2026 the NNP announced that it was the first party to name a full slate of 15 candidates. A full slate is a press release; an office, a staff, a canvass list and a budget are a campaign. In the south, the NNP had the former without the latter.

ANDY WILLIAMS MADE HIMSELF THE SEAT

Mr. Williams, meanwhile, turned a single term into a fixture. He became Minister for Mobilisation, Implementation and Transformation, the NDC's General Secretary, and one of the ministers most often appointed Acting Prime Minister when Dickon Mitchell travelled, including in May 2024, over Christmas 2024 and in May 2026. Each appointment placed the MP for St. George South at the head of government in the eyes of his own voters.

His 4,637 votes were 608 more than in 2022, in a year when fewer people voted, and he won every polling division, from Springs to Calliste. That is what a constituency machine looks like.

THE 5,510 WHO STAYED HOME

The most damning number in St. George South is not a candidate's total. Turnout here this year was 54.5 per cent, the lowest of all 15 constituencies in Grenada: of 12,103 registered voters, 5,510 did not vote, more people than the entire electorate of the Town of St. George or of St. George North West. The register has grown by 1,200 names since 2022, yet 426 fewer ballots were cast.

The arithmetic of a comeback begins there. To overturn the 2026 result, the NNP would need 1,397 voters to switch sides, or 2,793 additional supporters to turn out, just over half of everyone who stayed home. That is a four-year undertaking, not a campaign. The airport workers, hotel staff, university employees and young families of the south are precisely the voters the NNP says it wants, and it has built nothing permanent with which to find them.

WHAT CAN BE DONE: A FOUR-YEAR PLAN FOR THE SOUTH

St. George South will not be won back by the next caretaker named eighteen months before an election. It can be won only by a party that starts now and treats the seat as a four-year campaign. The steps are not complicated; they have simply never been tried here.

Year one, 2027: choose a candidate who lives in the constituency, and commit publicly to keeping that person for at least two elections, win or lose. Open a permanent office on the Grand Anse corridor with paid staff, funded centrally by the party rather than left to the caretaker. Map all 33 polling divisions, from Springs to Calliste, and build a household list of the 5,510 who stayed home and of the voters who have drifted away since 2018.

Year two, 2028: run a listening programme by sector as well as by village: hotel and restaurant workers, airport staff, SGU employees and students' landlords, small businesses and vendors on the beach strip. Publish, in their own words, what residents say their principal problems are, and build a short local programme around three of them. Register new and young voters every month, not every election.

Year three, 2029: hold the sitting member to account in public through a quarterly constituency report card, measured against the government's own promises for the south. Recruit a captain for each of the 33 polling divisions, and train volunteers to contact every household on the list at least three times a year, beginning with the eight Blessed Sacrament divisions and Springs, where the NNP's vote held up best.

Year four, 2030: campaign on a record of presence. By then the NNP candidate should have attended more community events, resolved more individual problems and been seen in more neighbourhoods than any challenger in the seat's history. Set honest targets: win back the 1,116 voters lost since 2022, then reach into the non-voters. Recovering the 2022 vote alone would cut the margin by more than a third; winning the seat means persuading roughly 1,400 people to switch, or finding nearly 2,800 new supporters.

THE LESSON FOR EVERY NNP SEAT

Mr. Williams has demonstrated the method. He was local, he was visible, and he turned office into presence. In 2022 he won by bringing new voters to the polls; in 2026 he held them while the NNP's own supporters stayed home.

The NNP's failure here is not that it lost to him. It is that it never seriously tried to become the party of the south. Until it does, St. George South will remain what the last four elections have made it: a revolving door for the NNP, and a home for whomever the NDC sends there.

THE ARITHMETIC OF ST. GEORGE SOUTH

Measure	2018	2022	2026
NNP votes	3,536	2,961	1,845
NDC votes	2,678	4,029	4,637
NNP share of two-party vote	56.9%	42.4%	28.5%
NNP two-party share nationally		48.0%	37.7%
Winning margin	NNP +858	NDC +1,068	NDC +2,792
Registered voters		10,903	12,103
Turnout		64.4%	54.5% (lowest of 15)
Registered voters who did not vote		3,884	5,510
Polling divisions won by the NNP			0 of 33
Switchers the NNP needs to win		535	1,397

Two-party figures exclude minor candidates. 2026: DPM 87, GSDP 8. 2026 figures are provisional results from the Parliamentary Elections Office, all 33 polling divisions verified.

WHAT IT MEANS FOR 2030/31

1. Pick a local candidate early, and keep them for two elections.
2. Fund the caretaker centrally: an office and staff are the minimum.
3. Do not parachute in: the 2022 candidate lost the south, then lost Carriacou.
4. Chase the 5,510 non-voters, not just the party faithful.
5. Organise by sector: hotels, airport, SGU and small business.
6. Recruit a captain for each of the 33 polling divisions.
7. Publish a quarterly report card on the sitting MP.
8. Do not mistake a minister's personal vote for a party base.

Sources: Parliamentary Elections Office live results, live.elections.gd (2026, provisional; read 7 Nov 2026); Wikipedia (2013 and 2022 results; constituency profile); The New Today (2018 and 2022 results; 2022 candidate reports; NNP caretakers report, 2025); NOW Grenada (NNP caretakers, Apr and Sep 2025; acting PM appointments; 2026 results and candidate list); NNP (full slate, Feb 2026); Grenada Informer (25 Apr 2025); Government of Grenada (minister profile). Analytics computed by the author from the published counts. Analysis by Greg Hosten, Vol. 10 of a weekly constituency series. Written in the style of a newspaper report; not a publication of any news organisation.